The 20th CPC National Congress, which is expected to open in Beijing on Sunday, is regarded as especially important as the Party is leading the Chinese people in embarking on a new journey to comprehensively build China into a modern socialist country, after the task of building a moderately prosperous society in all respects was completed last year.

A total of 2,296 delegates have been elected to attend the Congress. In addition to setting national policy goals, it will elect a new CPC Central Committee, the Party's top leadership, and a new CPC Central Commission for Discipline Inspection. Amendments to the Party Constitution are also expected at the Congress.

Speaking at a workshop attended by senior Party and government officials in July, Xi Jinping, general secretary of the CPC Central Committee, said the 20th CPC National Congress would emphasize the strategic tasks the Party will have and the major steps it will take over the next five years, which hold the key to the country's modernization drive. An effort must be made to work out new plans and measures to tackle the problem of unbalanced and inadequate development nationwide, Xi said.

The electoral work, running from November 2021 through July 2022, has successfully concluded. The delegates are broadly representative. A total of 771 delegates, or 33.6 percent of the total, are from the frontline. Among them, 192 are workers or migrant workers, 85 are farmers, and 266 are professionals and technicians.

The number of female delegates reached 619, or 27 percent of the total, an increase of 2.8 percentage points compared with the 19th CPC National Congress five years ago.

There are 264 ethnic minority delegates, who are from 40 ethnic minority groups.

The delegates come from various sectors of society, various administrative levels, and various institutions including Party and government departments, enterprises, public institutions and people's organizations.

The average age of the delegates is 52.2, and about 59.7 percent of them are under 55.

About 95.4 percent of them have a diploma from junior college or above. More than half of the delegates own a master's degree.

2,224 delegates, or 96.9 percent of the total, joined the CPC after the reform and opening-up started in 1978.

Strict procedures were observed throughout the electoral process, from the nomination and candidate selection to the organizational review and election.

All grassroots Party organizations were mobilized, with an average participation rate of 99.5 percent of Party members.

Various measures, including the establishment of tip-off platforms and the mobilization of supervision taskforces, were adopted to ensure a clean election.
